Marines in Philippines attack civilian rebels

MARINA, Philippines (AP) — Battle-dressed marines, firing tear gas and swinging truncheons, attacked civilians manning street barricades outside a military camp at dawn on Monday.

The display horrified people supporting two senior military officers who had been held in a military camp who are demanding that President Ferdinand E. Marcos resign and hand over power to Corazon Aquino. She claims she defeated Marcos in the Feb. 7 presidential election.

Witnesses said some students tried to link arms to stop and block the marines.

Many people tumbled and fell as they tried to escape the troopers, according to radio reports from the scene. There were no immediate reports on casualties.

The assault took place on a side street near Camp Crème, where ousted Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, former deputy military chief of staff, were entrenched with troops loyal to them.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Sunday evening, "The president appealed earlier today to President Marcos to avoid an attack against other elements of the Philippine armed forces. Regrettably, there are now reports of an attack."

Suspected killer faces execution in Florida

MATLAHUEQUE, Peru (AP) — Theodore Bundy, one-time law student believed responsible for the murders of several women across the country, is scheduled to die next week in the state's electric chair, eight years after he strangled two sleeping sorority sisters.

Unless lawyers win a stay, the 39-year-old Bundy will be executed March 4 for the Jan. 15, 1978, beatings and strangulations of Margaret Bowman and Lisa Levy as they slept in the Chi Omega sorority house at Florida State University.

The dark-haired, dark-haired law student has also been sentenced to death in Florida for killing of a child, convicted in a Utah kidnapping charged in a Colorado slaying, and once was sought by the FBI for questioning in 36 slayings of young women, mostly in the West.

"Bundy is like a plague. Everywhere he goes, death follows," Assistant State Attorney Jack Lamm said. He is due to appear before the Board of Executive Clemency.

Prosecutors said Bundy entered the Chi Omega house and beat four women with a club, killing two and seriously injuring two others. They said he then broke into a nearby house, where he severely beat another woman.

On behalf of Bundy, three lawyers are searching for a writ of habeas corpus transcripts for a trial error that could bring a reprieve or a delay of execution. The lawyers work for the Office of Capital Collateral Representative, a state agency that provides lawyers for indigent inmates once death warrants have been signed.

Congress considering overhauling military

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Armed Services Committee has approved a plan to overhaul the Central Intelligence Staff, the secret military arm, in an effort to end wasteful defense service rivalry, according to congressional sources.

As the panel worked behind closed doors late last week, a separate White House commission on military reform was putting the final touches on another proposal for the Pentagon to spend money more efficiently.

The two proposals aim to end waste and duplication in the federal government's largest branch, and come as the Pentagon is under increasing fire over such issues as spending $400 on hammers and $600 on toilet seat covers.

The matter also won attention after the October 1983 invasion of Grenada, when U.S. ground forces on the tiny Caribbean island could not talk to each other because their radios did not operate on the same frequencies.

Critics said the problem showed the military services needed better coordination to buy compatible weapons and other gear. Two of the calls for reform came from Sens. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the panel's ranking Democrat.

During the deliberations, Sen. John Warner, R-Va., a former secretary of the Navy, was a key opponent of major changes in the military, sources said.

The mass circulation daily Bild, quoting two West German space experts, said Cosmos 1714 was reeling toward a fiery re-entry in the atmosphere and that parts of it could plunge to Earth between March 21 and 25.

There have been Soviet reports of problems with Cosmos 1714.

"The steering mechanism on Cosmos 1714 has failed," Hans-Joachim Gass, director of the satellite control center at West Germany's space mission complex in Oberpfaffenhofen, was quoted by Bild as saying.

"What exactly the satellite has on board is secret," Gass was quoted as saying in Bild's front-page story.

Bild quoted Gass as saying West German space officials believe that it becomes a matter of national security to indicate a possible crash of satellite pieces on West German soil.

The newspaper quoted Horst Hewel, a West Berlin radar engineer and astronomer, as estimating March 23 as a probable date of a crash by Cosmos 1714.

Cultural challenges part of foreign study

here," she said. "Teachers and students should be more aware of the differences and try to great challenges and extend themselves to them."

"I love BYU because of the great education it offers me," Caceres said. "I have had an excellent experience here, because I made up my mind in Lima that I would try to get myself involved in student activities and try to understand the American culture."

Perez said his experience at BYU has been positive, and he's been willing to assimilate to the culture and understand the people.

"You need to be willing to absorb what you learn, or else you're wasting your time. You might as well go back to your native country," he said.

Differences in the approaches of learning may be different than in the student's native country, Madisen said. International students generally are not used to our educational system. Many foreign students are required to do a lot of memorization in their native countries and aren't challenged to take their own initiative in their own learning like we do here.

Long separations from family and loved ones can be another trial for international students. "Their relatives are so far away, they can't help but get lonely or depressed," Madisen said. "Some of us are fortunate if they can go visit their families every year."

Madsen said the problems faced by BYU international students are not as serious as the problems encountered by foreign students at other colleges, because the LDS Church teaches that all people are brothers and sisters regardless of their nationality.

"I have met many kind and generous people here and I like the way they live. My experience has been positive because I like the way they live and honor our lives," said Mario Perez, a graduate student from Santiago, Chile, majoring in astronomy.

Meet the executives during Retail Fortnight

Twenty-four great companies in one location, February 24 through March 6.

Meet the Executives

Great shopping centers are recognized by customers as having great stores in which to shop. Multitudes of customers flock to their doors. Over a period of years, many of the top companies in America have come to recognize that BYU has great students and therefore recruit here. Because of the quality of the sales visiting BYU, there has been an increase in the number of students who want to become executives in retailing. BYU is popular this fall with 49 executives visiting BYU campus during the Retail Fortnight seeking BYU graduates and interns. This is a record number for the Winter semester. They will be seeking exceptional BYU students who want to become executives in the fast-paced, challenging retail industry that employs over 10 million people and whose sales exceed $1.3 trillion last year.

Students are invited to involve themselves in the Retail Fortnight activities during this two-week period. They will find twenty-four great companies in one location. Shopping for executive trainee positions has never been better!

Length of Activity Extended

This activity has normally been a retail career week; however, due to the number of companies requesting permission to attend, the length of time has been extended to two weeks. This is the second year of the Retail Fortnight.

The Purpose of Retail Fortnight

Most college students don't understand what a retail executive does. Activities of the Retail Fortnight not only include recruiting activities, but store orientations, classes, panel discussions, and executive lectures—all with the goal of upgrading students' understanding of what executives do in retailing and executive career opportunities in retailing.

Special Activities During Retail Fortnight

Store Orientations

Executives will brief students regarding their companies and the executive career opportunities with them—a must for students interested in learning about the company. Students who are signed up for recruiting and internship interviews should attend. All students are welcome.

Many College Majors Can Lead to an Executive Career in Retailing

When most people think of retailing they think of merchandising; that is, the buying function or store management. Merchandising is the heart of retailing; however, there are other key functions as well: store operations, sales promotion, personnel, financial control, and electronic data processing.

Because of this wide range of required executive talent, the Skaggs Institute works with ten undergraduate programs and three graduate programs. The graduate programs are: master of business administration, master of accounting, and master of organizational behavior. Undergraduate programs include: business management, accounting, information management, clothing and textiles, communications, agricultural economics, computer science, managerial economics, design, and interior environment.

Utah wildlife poaching increasing at an alarming rate, officials say

By CHERYL S. OSBORN
University Staff Writer

An average drive up the canyon has turned into a slaughter. As the pickup truck turns a corner, the riders catch sight of a buck on the side of the road, and quickly stop. One of the men reaches under the seat to get his spotlight, then turns his rifle from behind his seat, cocks it and quietly steps out of the truck.

In practiced unison, the spotlight flashes, the driver aims, and the buck freezes, temporarily blinded by the glare. The crack of the rifle shot pierces the silence.

The buck stumbles, then falls. The men cheer, slap the driver on the shoulder as they crawl back into the truck, then drive away.

This is a fictitious example of the type of slaughter thousands of animals in Utah fall prey to each year. Illegal hunters, called poachers, are killing them at a rate that is alarming wildlife officials.

Last year, approximately 4,800 deer were illegally killed. "The number of illegal kills is about two-thirds the number of legal kills each year," said Delbert Atkinson, the regional enforcement officer of the Utah State Division of Wildlife Resources at Springville.

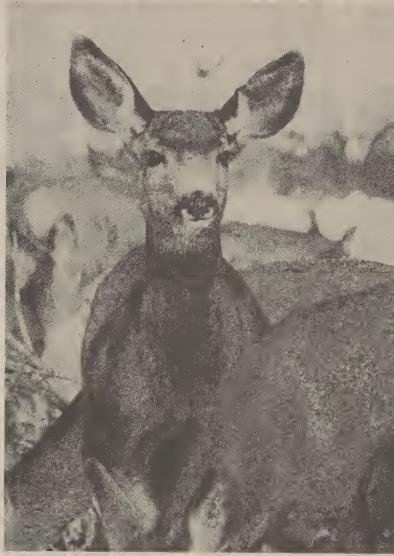

It used to be that people thought deer were only poached to get food on the table for a hard-pressed family. However, with the recent increase in wildlife exploitation, that attitude is rapidly changing. In many cases, poachers fail to tempt when the opportunity to shoot a deer at close range presents itself, said Atkinson.

One common technique of poaching is called "spotlighting" — momentarily blinding the antlers with a spotlight and then shooting them. Another technique frequently employed is using a car to chase the animal down to the point of exhaustion, and then killing it, said Atkinson. Game animals such as deer, elk and moose are primary targets of poaching.

More poachers are ruthless. Last year, Utah game officials found a moose carcass with seven bullet holes in its stomach. Evidence indicated that the animal suffered for several hours before it died, said Atkinson.

Elk are also victims of illegal shooting. In some western states, a herculean effort involves killing elk and selling the antlers to people who use ground elk antlers in their thing from medical treatment to aphrodisiacs, said Max Bahos, a conservation officer trainee of the Utah Wildlife Resources.

Elk poaching increases during the spring, as the elk's new antlers are velvet-like. "The velvet on elk antlers is in the most demand," said Bahos.

Some wildlife experts estimate that the number of deer killed illegally is equal to or exceeds the number of legal kills each year. Elk poaching is also common in Utah.

"Poaching is big business," he said. These antlers are sold on the market for approximately $1,500 to $2,000.

Another common poaching-for-profit activity in Utah Valley is the commercial selling of deer meat, said Atkinson. Typically, poachers will also sell the animals' heads to unprincipled trophy hunters.

During the winter, a high concentration of deer come down to the foothills looking for food and "people start shooting them for their racks," said Bahos. Poachers collect racks before and after the hunting season and then enter the biggest rack in the "Big Buck" contests.

More often than not, the Utah Valley poachers use the big game animals for target practice and then leave them behind to die. Poachers get tired of shooting tin cans for practice, so when they see a deer they shoot it instead," said Bahos. "It usually takes a couple days for it to die."

Poaching also runs wild during open season. It's not uncommon for hunters to shoot a buck and then hit it while they try to shoot a larger one. If he is successful in bringing down a larger buck, the smaller one is left behind. These hidden deer are later found by game officials when the hunting season is over.

Others are animals that are illegally shot go to hunters who are unable to bring down their own. Wildlife officials call this "party hunting," where one hunter in the party kills a buck for each of the other members in his group, said Atkinson.

"By Utah law, you have to kill your own deer," he said. Once the licensed hunter has shot a buck, it is illegal for him to shoot another during the remainder of the season.

However, it is common for hunters after purchasing a hunting permit for themselves to illegally obtain additional permits on behalf of their wives, brothers, sisters and grandparents so they kill a deer they switch permits and hunt another Atkinson said.

Many sportsmen are concerned about the rampant poaching. "There's only a handful of poachers, but they give the rest of us hunters a bad reputation," said Doug Nielsen, a junior from Provo, majoring in public relations. "It makes me ill just to think about it."

Lawmen are fighting back in Utah Valley. Officials are currently using aircraft to keep an eye on the activities below. In addition, the Utah Wildlife Resources Department has set up a toll-free hot line to receive tips. For information concerning on the person's involvement, a reward of up to $500 is offered to people who tip off poachers, said Atkinson.

The hot line averages about 40 calls a month, he said. More than 100 arrests were made last year from hot line calls, said Bahos. When a vehicle description and license plate number is given, officers have a greater chance of catching the poachers.

Few poachers are thwarted by the law because the penalty is minor compared to the commercial profits to be made. "We need to get a stiffer fine for poachers so they don't do it again," said Nielsen.

Very rarely are poachers hit for a maximum fine, said Bahos.

However, an animal restitution fee is required in addition to the fine. The state determines what it will cost to replace the dead animal, and the poacher must pay the fee.

Studies show that officials are able to apprehend only about 2 to 5 percent of the poachers, said Bahos.

Game law enforcement is integral to our work. The officers are often in remote areas with little or no backup, and most of the lawbreakers they encounter are armed.

Nationwide, the assault on game officers is higher than on other law enforcement officers. "Most of the stuff (about) is aimed at (the department) the most dangerous law enforcement," said Rudy Musclow, a St. George district conservation officer.

When he responded to a poaching tip one night, Musclow was attacked. He was knocked unconscious, his leg was broken and the poachers took off with his gun. Later that night someone shot and killed Musclow's gun. "The people were drunk, and there were more of them than there were of me," Musclow said.

Utah is the only state that has not yet had a wildlife game official killed while on duty, said Musclow.

MIAAMI (AP) — A teen-age girl, her boyfriend and his cousin were arrested in the strangulation of the girl's stepmother, whose dying screams were heard over the 911 emergency telephone line.

Estelle Arwood, 18, was denied bond after she was arrested on an anonymous tip in the strangulation of Vaughn Mitchell Robinson, who was found dead in her home last Wednesday by police officers who rushed to answer her call but arrived moments too late, said police spokesman Angelo Bitis.

Robinson called police and screamed over the telephone from his bed in her house.

"There was a lot of screaming. She said she needed help," said police spokesman Reginald Roundtree. "You could hear the woman choking and gasping for breath and then there was silence."

Very rarely are poachers hit for a maximum fine, said Bahos.

However, an animal restitution fee is required in addition to the fine. The state determines what it will cost to replace the dead animal, and the poacher must pay the fee.

Studies show that officials are able to apprehend only about 2 to 5 percent of the poachers, said Bahos.

Non-LDS students face adjustments

SHERRI SPRUANCE
Today's Editor

Although BYU is run by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, many come here are affiliated with it. Non-LDS students here for a variety of reasons and face both unique challenges and many of the same ones LDS students face.

John Karnaemaa, a second-year student from Fremont, Mich., did he sent an application to BYU because he thought the law school might be looking for him from a non-LDS enrollment. His friend, Jim Zinnecker, a third-year law student from Gloversville, N.Y., came because of the school's national reputation. However, along with the advantages there were also adjustments.

"Almost everyone here comes from some religious background," said Zinnecker. "I am different being in an area where a religious organization has so much power," said Zinnecker. "It's hard to re-orient to social activities if you are not a member of the church. You feel uncomfortable."

"That is true to some extent," said Karnaemaa. "The church here is the whole life."

Zinnecker said he has found that, because students come from the same background, they haven't had their thoughts challenged. However, the non-LDS find their beliefs challenged constantly.

"For me, I came from a conservative background and it has made me more conservative," he said. "The one very positive thing is that it has sighted me a lot more about my religion through comparing the two."

When people say daily you aren't a member of the true church, 'you live your life and your religion a little better to prove their wrong,'" Zinnecker said.

Kelly Walrad, a junior from San Jose, Ca., majoring in zoology, came to BYU because she got an academic scholarship. She said it was hard to adjust to the way BYU influences on-school things, such as where students are allowed to live. She also said her beliefs challenged.

"I'm closer to what I believe and it is easier for you to use it helps you grow."

Many of the non-LDS who come to BYU come for the athletic programs. Trevor Molini, a sophomore from Parkers, Nev., majoring in international relations, said he came to BYU because of the football, not the social scene.

"I hadn't even opened up the Book of Mormon before I came here," he said. "I knew some Mormons but knew little about Mormon culture. At first, I felt like a minority." However, Molini decided against SC and UCLA to come to BYU because he said he knew it would be the best place for him. But at first, some of the culture was difficult to understand.

"When I first came here words like 'Family Home Evening' were new to me," he said. "I thought garments were longjohns." At first, he said he thought he wouldn't have any girlfriends because he wasn't LDS.

"But I found lots of girls came here. The people here are really good. At first I had a few prejudices because I didn't understand, but now they are erased from my mind," said Molini.

Tim Shove, a junior from Boulder, Colo., and a pre-med major, came here originally for gymnastics and originally for scholarships. Now he is playing guitar with the Young Ambassadors.

"Being a non-LDS Young Ambassador is a unique experience," he said. "For example, we give talks at firesides. Recently, I gave a talk at a stake about our relationship with the Savior."

The people at BYU were really different than at Boulder, he said. "There we still have flower children and a totally open-minded atmosphere."

"It's hard to get some people to treat you like a person and to look at you for who you are, not as a non-Mormon," he said. "I've just learned to do that."

Dave Wright, a senior majoring in P.E. from Petaluma, Ca., said he came here because it was the best school that offered him a football scholarship.

He said coming here calmed him down quite a bit. "I was a madman in high school," he said. "I don't think I'd have accomplished as much as I did if I had gone to a different type of school."

Larry Pratt, a junior from St. Louis, Mo., with a double major in finance and pre-law, is president of the only official non-LDS club on campus, the Student Baptist Union.

He said that while the majority of BYU students are non-Mormon, they don't stress the non-Mormon aspect at the BYU.

"Mormons come too and we have a lot of fun," he said. "It's good that we are here for people who are looking for something like us."

A lot of people feel pressure to "save" you, he said. But he tries to take it in stride.

"I may not agree and think their stand is wrong but I appreciate the concern," he said. "I don't take it as a criticism. I let them know where I stand. And even though neither of us would ever convert the other, it has been helpful to both of us. If you look at it as an attack or as pressure, you'll go nuts."

However, Kelly Walrad said while most people respect her beliefs some just don't seem to understand.

"Once in an English Literature class we were discussing Calvin and people were laughing at what were essentially my Protestant beliefs," she said. "Maybe if they had known I was there, they would have been more sensitive."

Nancy Andrus added seven boards to help the Cougars beat Colorado Saturday 98-75. BYU is now 8-0 in the High Country Athletic Conference.

Easy win for Y, beat Rams 98-75

By STEPHEN BINGHAM
University Sports Writer

This was an easy one. The BYU women's basketball team won its tenth straight game as it defeated Colorado State 98-75 Saturday in the Marriott Center.

The Lady Rams never stood a chance. Less than a minute into the game the score was tied at 4-4, but then the Cougars took off. Five minutes later BYU led 21-6 and didn't look back the rest of the game.

"We played well and really well the first quarter of the ball game," said BYU Coach Courtney Leishman. "When we brought in the substitutes it broke up our continuity a little bit."

"I enjoyed the first 10 minutes," Leishman said referring to a past comment that a blowout is not fun for either team. "Once you have the game won there is no sense in gunning anybody."

By half time Tresa Spaulding and Cathy Nixon were both off the figures with 16 and 12 points respectively. The Cougars went to the locker room with a 51-26 half-time lead.

BYU came out slow in the beginning of the second half but soon picked it up. The only thing worse than being up by 25 points at half time is being down by 25 points," Leishman said. "What is there to talk about when you go to the dressing room up by 25 at half time? mentally you don't feel out (in the second half) as psyched and as keyed up as you do at the start of the ball game."

"We've just played three games, it's been a long week," Leishman said. "Some of the girls are getting a little tired."

"For us we played well, with 10 points and five boards. Of course we get used to Spaulding and Nixon playing the game that they do," he said.

Spaulding and Nixon led the Cougars in statistics. Spaulding had 30 points while Nixon chipped in 18. Both had seven rebounds.

Hare added 11 points. Hare and Karina Zapata each had five assists. Nancy Andrus added seven boards.

BYU shot 59 percent from the field and 70 percent from the line for the game.

With the win the Cougars solidified its first place standing in the HCAC with an 8-0 conference record and ran its season record up to 15-5.

Adjusting to states hasn't been too hard for distance runner

By JORDAN COX
University Sports Writer

For a person who doesn't like snow and says injuries are more likely to occur when training in the winter, senior middle-distance runner Aisling Molloy, from Ballymohon, Ireland, has not done too badly since coming to BYU.

Currently, Molloy is part of, or holds seven indoor track records. Friday she qualified for the NCAA indoor championships in the mile at the L.A. Times Invitational. Earlier this year she qualified for the 1,000-meter run at the Husker Invitational in Nebraska.

Some of her other honors include: 1983 — named NCAA All-American for winning the mile run at the NCAA indoor championship; 1984 — All-HCAC for winning both the 800 and the 1,500-meter runs at the HCAC championships; 1985 — placed fifth in the 1,500-meter at the NCAA Indoor Championships for an All-American honor.

With all this success Molloy wants most to accomplish her big goal — to graduate with a degree in P.E.

"When I first came to BYU, running was first on my list of priorities, but now my education comes first," she said. "I want to be able to go home and be a coach, but I can't get into coaching without first becoming a teacher."

Her decision to come to the U.S. to get an education was influenced by another Irish runner, Carey May, who made the transition easier for Molloy.

Shane discussed the potential of Molloy with May and felt she would be an asset to the school. The recruiting process was set in motion.

Correspondence between the Irish natives made the decision comfortable for Molloy. But until the government of Ireland said they would have a degree from BYU, Aisling didn't know for sure if she would come.

The impact of her decision was not fully understood until a week before she was to leave home. "It was difficult to leave my family, but since Aisling was here it was easier to come," Molloy said.

The reason for leaving home was natural because Molloy is very close to her father who she says was the greatest influence in her life when she began running at age six.

Sports Days in school and track clubs were her avenues to success until she began to train consistently at age 11.

"When you run at a young age, you are encouraged to do everything, but no pushes you too hard," she said.

It was at this time Molloy said she got serious about her future in track. Aisling started to train with the national 400-meter coach, but still had a difficult time convincing herself to run so much mileage to run.

"It was particularly tortuous because she trained alone because she lived in a small town; however, the training paid off when she won the 800-meter run in the Irish National Junior Championships before coming to BYU.

Men's gymnastics team tops Falcons, falls to Illini

In its final home stand of the season the 13th-ranked BYU men's gymnastics team fell to No. 9 Illinois while toppling Air Force and Eastern Montana over the weekend.

Friday was not the Cougars' night as they fell to Illinois and Montana came in third.

"We looked like we had pre-season jitters," said BYU Coach Wayne Young. "We hadn't competed for three weeks and I think that made a big difference."

Young's team were over

Saturday as several members of the BYU team set new season personal season records and hit the highest team score this season — 270.30.

On Saturday (Saturday) they were more relaxed, a little more hungry, and they weren't quite as worried about the meet," said Young. "Now if we could just develop a little more consistency, we're still making too many mistakes."

"Doug Coyle has got to be commended,"

Young said. "He's coming off of a very serious infection in his wrist and has been out of practice for two and a half weeks and he's come back like gang busters."

Coyle set new season

highs on the floor, vault, parallel bars and matched his season high on the bar.

Other personal season

highs set over the weekend were by Ron

West, Roger Merritt,

Mike Kane, John

Dohner, Todd Hafner

and Doug Chausow.

Gummy bears, worms squirm to popularity*Once foreign made, now thrive in U.S. market

WINONA, Minn. (AP) — Gummy Bears by the millions, tens of millions. Squirms by the bag and vat.

Stacks, racks and packs of chewy tart-tasting candies that are so popular nationwide they are crowding the Schuler Chocolates Inc., building in Winona.

Demand for the candies is so great, and facilities so short that the company is seeking to boost Gummy Bears and Squirm production with a $1.5 million expansion that'll add about 45 jobs, said President William Schuler.

The expansion won't add new space to the factory, but will put more equipment in existing space, Schuler said. The down-the-line take-off production, which is now around a billion Gummy Bears and a quarter billion Squirms a year, Schuler is the first U.S. company to make the candies.

Schuler Chocolates now is owned by Brock Candy Co., of Chattanooga, Tenn.

The story of how the Gummy Bears — so popular in Europe for so long — came to be made in Winona actually starts in 1980 when Schuler's son Kurt made a comment.

As William Schuler tells the story, his son came home from junior high one day and said his German club was selling the Bears, then produced in Europe, to raise money.

"Those Gummy Bears are great, you should make them," he told his father.

So Kurt did. And when he asked two clerks research, continued when he asked two clerks at a Twin Cities candy counter what candy sold very well, but which surprised them in sales. "They looked at each other and they both said at the same time 'Gummy Bears,'" Schuler said.

The company did more in-depth investigation and verified the demand.

But there was one problem. Though the little candy bears were easy to make, it was actually very difficult to get the right tartness and texture, Schuler said.

So Schuler Chocolates worked for about a year to get the candy right and continues to work on improvements, Schuler said.

Some of the testing involved his son's friends and students at colleges his older children were attending. Schuler would send them batches of different attempts and his children would give them friends for an opinion, he said.

BYU crowd enjoys 'Rich' concert; talented musicians add to 'jazz'

By DAVID W. STAUB
University Staff Writer

Many historians claim that George Washington was a great president because he surrounded himself with great men. If that is true, then Buddy Rich is the George Washington of jazz.

Although it is common knowledge that Rich is the best drummer since Gene Krupa, it is not common knowledge that his band consists of musicians that are as good as Stanley Clark, Bob James and Maynard Ferguson. Though their names may not be as familiar to us as Clark and the others, their talents are phenomenal.

Rich made sure that every member of his 14 piece band had an opportunity to shine through their own solo parts.

The crowd of 1,400 showed enthusiastic appreciation for each member's solo. However, the crowd went wild over Steve Marcus' solo performance in "Good News." Marcus made his saxophone scream, moan and wince better than any musician of this era.

Rich, who may have said 20 words during the entire concert, let his sticks do the talking. He thrilled the crowd through drums and cymbal solos. His best solo was performed during his band's rendition of the prologue to "West Side Story." The solo, which lasted for a full 10 minutes, brought the audience to its feet with wild applause.

Eating champ loses running contest

NEW YORK (AP) — The man who finished last in the Empire State Building Run Up on Thursday is the same Joe Tomonaga who won a hot dog eating contest at Coney Island last week.

Hiroyuki Tomonaga, 21, was the last of 52 runners who raced up the stairs of the Empire State from the lobby to the 86th floor observatory. His time was 29 minutes, 37.9 seconds, more than 18 minutes off the record.

He said he didn't mind bringing up the rear since he had won the eating contest Feb. 12.

On that day, Tomonaga, cheered by a group of Japanese students, wolfed down 10½ frankfurters in 10 minutes, beating the defending champ, Oscar Rodriguez, by one hot dog. Afterwards, Tomonaga, who is 6-foot-6 and 264 pounds, said he was going out for sushi.

The winner of the Empire sprint, Al Waquoit of New Mexico, won for the fourth time in nine years.

Young Indians work for better image

JULIE A. FENTON
University Staff Writer

Cautiously he peers out from beneath his dark black hair; his face displays constrained interest and excitement.

Young Leander Taopis is a Ute Indian and fact that he is showing interest in anything is a very good sign.

Taopis represents many of today's Native American youth.

They are cautious, reserved and shy, yet aggressive, rebellious and sometimes belligerent. Lazy drunkards and good-for-nothing are what they are often labeled.

Labeled affect youth.

These labels have affected generations of Indians.

Attitudes concerning education for example are formed by parents who pass their beliefs to their children.

According to Forrest S. Cuch, a Ute Indian and educational division director at the Ute Indian Reservation Adult Vocational Training School, there has been 20 years of such defamation.

"It is not easy to deal with socio-cultural problems," he said in an interview. "I am talking about when the culture converges with another culture that they are lazy and good for nothing. What we are attempting to do at our school is to re-educate and strengthen our people."

Many young Indians are fighting to change the image that society has of them.

Fourteen-year-old Carlos Chimburas wants to be a basketball player. Eric Ridley wants to be a karate master and 13-year-old rank Wilson wants to be a jockey and a millionaire.

These young Indians and others like them are striving to achieve their goals. They are earning that they do not have to live up to society's projected image of them. They are earning that they are talented and they can become whoever they wish.

Fighting years of prejudice and depression is the goal.

Some children are so shy and withdrawn they are unable to function in society. Others have such poor attitudes toward "the white man" that they cannot learn to develop their talents.

Help is available

However, building self-esteem and character is not something that Indian students need to do alone. Help is available, in the form of vocational schools like the one on the Ute reservation, but also through BYU educator and photographer Howard Rainer.

Rainer, an amateur director of American Indian Services, is well acquainted with the problems of Indian youth; he is a Taos-Pueblo Indian.

He understands the difficulties Indian youth experience with a lack of libraries and social activities. While still young, he traveled to school and was labeled backward. He could speak only his native Towa and English.

While in high school, one of Rainer's instructors found promise in him and began to teach him English. With her encouragement, he found renewed enthusiasm for school. Rainer longed to be an art major but realized at Bacone Junior College in Oklahoma that art was not his destiny.

Many young Indians are fighting to change the image that society has of them.

Fourteen-year-old Carlos Chimburas wants to be a basketball player. Eric Ridley wants to be a karate master and 13-year-old rank Wilson wants to be a jockey and a millionaire.

These young Indians and others like them are striving to achieve their goals. They are earning that they do not have to live up to society's projected image of them. They are earning that they are talented and they can become whoever they wish.

"My experiences prepared me to realize that I could be a powerful force in turning bad experiences into good ones," said Rainer. "I can help kids cope with problems and then succeed."

The workshops are really an experience in self-esteem boosting, and students sit in a circle group while Rainer teaches them how to accomplish things. Most Indian students appeared reserved and unwilling to talk, however, in the group they were asked to speak about themselves.

"The two most important things are a willingness to try and respect," said Rainer in a workshop to a group of students from West Junior High School in Salt Lake City. "Always say, do, act and think. And always be proud to be who you are," he said.

Rainer said this one boy stood proudly and held his head high as this boy, long, dark braids fell to his waist.

The evidence of the benefits of the workshop were immediately apparent. By the end of the session, students who would not even look up at the beginning of the workshop were smiling, participating and showing interest in the group activities.

In the workshop, Indian students gain pride and feel good about themselves. After a workshop, students feel like they can be somebody, not just ignored and shoved in a corner," said Marcy Archowich a 14-year-old student from West Junior High School.

Chimburas said, "I have gained more confidence. My first workshop I was slumped down and didn't look up. Now I talk a lot and feel I can achieve my goal of being a basketball player."

Many of the students at the workshop echoed the same feelings.

Feeling confident

They said they felt more confident, better about themselves and more able to voice their feelings. Some students had only attended one workshop, others as many as 15 but they all agreed that the sessions are extremely beneficial.

This positive program is the answer to it all," said Nancy Denver, Title Four coordinator and teacher of Ute history and culture at West Junior High School. "They have to have a positive program so they can look at themselves as being important."

Denver said the effects of the program were apparent after only two workshops with students reporting a remarkable change. Students are standing up in class, sharing Indian stories and doing things we couldn't get them to do before."

"Students are now able to look you in the eye. I am 100 percent behind workshops," said Denver.

Problem with workshops

There is one problem with these self-esteem workshops: there are not enough of them.

"I think that we need more workshops, they are not available to us," Denver said. "You can't expect to have one workshop and expect people to change."

Such as echoed Denver's sentiment. "Howard is a good man and he is doing all that he can, but he is only one man. You cannot wipe away 20 years of negative programming with an hour and a half of inspirational talking," said said.

It is not going to be enough but it will help, said Cuch.

Rainer has gained national recognition since he started the self-esteem and leadership training workshops. He now travels throughout the country bringing his special workshops to native American youth.

Howard Rainer and his workshops work, but the country needs more of them to truly develop the potential of America's Indian youth.

Galaxy contains much peculiar cosmic matter

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Whatever lies at the heart of the Milky Way galaxy is more peculiar than has been thought. That's what data collected by astronomers at the University of Rochester suggests.

"We want to leave a place for families to remember their loved ones. The feeling at the capitol with the replica of the D.C. memorial was awesome. It was just an incredible feeling of togetherness," said Gardner.

The veterans in Utah were also able to experience that feeling of togetherness, and "a welcome home for the first time," at the Freedom Festival parade last July 4, said Gardner.

"Two hundred and seventy-five veterans marched in the parade while almost 300,000 spectators watched and cheered. They threw flowers and gave us a standing ovation. After 14 years I finally felt I received some of the recognition I deserved," he said.

But Gardner said they aren't a bunch of cry babies. "We just want a little recognition for a job we had to do."

Langdon said the parade was a sort of beginning. "The parade was a welcome home and the start of a cleansing for us. The memorial will help the people forget what we did and be able to say . . . hey, we're with you."

The memorial, which will honor the 365 Utah soldiers killed or missing in Vietnam, has been narrowed down to five possible spots.

Although Gardner said the major thrust is getting the memorial built, its location is also very important. Possible sites are Memory Grove, the state capital rotunda, Camp Williams, Springville Mountain Park or one block east of the county courthouse in Provo.

"There is a very strong possibility it will be built in Provo. We've already had a tentative approval by the County Commission," said Gardner.

In fact, Commissioner Gary Anderson, is "very supportive" of the actions taken by the committee.

"I am supportive of their efforts because I believe it raises the consciousness of the public and that is important. It is important to recognize and many people are happy to be a part of it," he said.

The committee is now in the process of selecting an artist to sculpt the memorial, which will stand seven feet high, according to Blaustein.

N.Y. children real pushovers at annual toy fair

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 100,000 people, mostly from New York City, crowded the annual Toy Fair here this week.

It is the world's largest toy fair, a toymaker's dream.

Nicky, 9, loves playing war with his G.I. Joe, Transformers and Gobots. His favorite color is blue.

Emily, 5, loves to cut dice. She likes the Caboose Patch preemies, Rainbow Brite toys and Care Bear dolls. Her favorite color is pink.

On a visit to Toy Fair, the annual meeting where manufacturers hope will be the hot toys of 1986, they were an easy sell. They wanted to buy almost everything.

"Remember," their mother told them. "I old you girls like a man. You can't take anything home."

Nicky was a pushover when it came to criticizing Coleco's new line of Rambo action figures.

They are real pushovers at the annual toy fair.

Veterans set up plan to raise funds to build memorial honoring soldiers

By MICHELLE MELENDEZ
University Staff Writer

It all started with a walk down the street.

David Gardner, a Vietnam veteran, ran into another fellow veteran on the street corner last April. After talking, they decided they needed to do something about the recognition they felt they were getting from the community.

Not only did the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Committee Inc. develop from that conversation, but also what the group hopes will be a lasting tribute in the form of a memorial to the young men and women who fought for their country.

Although the committee was founded in Utah County in the hope that the memorial would be built in Springfield, it has been organized into a non-profit organization.

The theme of the drive is "Just one dollar" and the committee would like to raise the money by getting one dollar from every Utah resident.

The committee, under the current direction of John Langdon, hopes to raise $100,000 by kicking off the drive with dinner to take place in the Salt Palace in May.

"We hope to raise at least $35,000 at the dinner and then add to it," said Gardner.

Livingston, who served in Vietnam, said the memorial "is a long time coming. I had to put myself on the line out there, and then coming back to the indifference in America really hurt. Although I learned to deal with it, this memorial needs to be done."

The dinner will include speaker Paul H. Dunn, a veteran of World War II and a member of the Quorum of Seventy in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Livingston said he hopes to get a former marine who escaped from a POW camp in Vietnam, and possibly Sen. Jake Garn to speak.

Although the committee would like to have Garrison Langdon, he said it hasn't petitioned for legislative efforts in that area.

"We are a private organization and want to raise the money without government help. We'd like it to come from individuals and foundations, but we hope to raise the money on our own," he said.

Gardner said the committee has already raised $3,200 through public donations and hopes to begin meeting its goal of $15,000 a month. The unveiling of the memorial is set for July 4, 1987, and the last payment must be made by then.

"I know it's a pretty big goal to set, but I personally feel it's a reachable amount," he said.

A dance, radiothon and p.o.p.'s are only a few of the ways money is hoped to be raised.

"A p.o.p. is a point of purchase canister that we'd like to set up at counters in stores and around local schools where people can drop in money when they are buying a sandwich or a soft drink," he said.

Right now, the 12-member committee is in the process of working out deals with major corporations in Utah. Gardner said they hope to get financial donations.

"I believe that an important reason for establishing this memorial park is to provide a place where our citizens can pay tribute to all who have served our country," he said.

— Gov. Norm Bangerter

"We have several possibilities, and hope to see them work out," he said.

Gov. Norm Bangerter said he is supportive of the memorial.

"I believe that an important reason for establishing this memorial park is to provide a place where our citizens can pay tribute to all who have served our country, all who have fought for freedom," he said.

Despite some of the unrealities associated with raising the proposed amount of money, Gardner is "100 percent sure it will happen. The wall in Washington is still standing, and there are other walls that are still standing."

"What's something as important as this, you have to keep on going despite the little problems you come across," said Gardner. "We want the country to remember the sacrifices we made then, and now with the POW's that might still be in Vietnam."

"There is a lesson to be learned from Vietnam and it still needs to be learned by everyone. We don't want to forget Vietnam and we don't want to accuse of hindsight we won't be forgotten," he said.

Martin Blaustein, team leader for the local Veteran's Center and a member of the committee, said the memorial should stand as a symbol of anti-

American Samoa lawyers ask court to dismiss suit from LDS Church

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorneys for American Samoa and the Interior Department filed a motion to dismiss the case under advisement.

The Corporation of the Presiding Bishop of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, authorized to hold land on behalf of the LDS Church, filed the suit last June.

The lawsuit contested a ruling by the High Court of American Samoa in 1984 which held that the LDS Church could not own land in American Samoa under any circumstances because the territory's law restricts land ownership to persons of the Samoan race.

A basic ingredient of the suit is a 1981 decision by the High Court over a 360-acre plot of land in the village of Leauvai that had been leased since 1956.

The church argues that the High Court awarded land to Salatama Puaia, widow of the former chief. The others argue that the Malaeimi was communal land that would remain in the ownership of the family but that the widow would receive a rental income from it for life.

In federal court, Luu said the case was originally brought in the High Court as a simple trespass action, not as a test of federal law.

The trial court concluded that the land had always been communal property of the Puaia family, and the widow who sold the land to the church had no title to convey, Luu said.

"The court ruled that the 1981... decision merely recognized the widow's interest in rental payments under a lease to court, fixed their salaries and can remove them for cause and he decides the case," Luu said.

Gau took the motions to dismiss the case under advisement.

Alder thought it best for Ryan to return to class after 14 months to make up the lost time. Alder, the Head of Schools, health and safety officer, believed that Ryan was physically fit and posed no threat to students or teachers, as school officials feared.

Members of a group calling itself Concerned Parents of Western Middle School had met this week to discuss what to do about Ryan. They wanted to see him removed to seventh grade classes. An informal poll taken at a meeting of about 350 parents, students and local residents indicated about 100 parents would keep their children home.

Ryan's battle to return to class after 14 months came to an end last week when Alder, the Head of Schools, health and safety officer, believed that Ryan was physically fit and posed no threat to students or teachers, as school officials feared.

Alder thought it best for Ryan not to return until Friday because of a flu outbreak in the school.

Ryan, a hemophiliac who contracted AIDS, had been receiving transfusions from blood products, said last week that he looked forward to seeing his friends.

Students at last year's International Week examine booths set up to promote an atmosphere of understanding between cultures. This year's event will take place at BYU throughout the week.

International week promotes culture

By JULIE A. FENTON
University Staff Writer

The opportunity to visit distant and exotic lands and experience the culture of another country has arrived at BYU.

From Feb. 24 to March 1, International Week, complete with food, dance and cultural booths, will be on campus. The international event is sponsored by the International Student Office.

"This year's theme, 'We Are The World,' was chosen to portray the idea of forging bonds of international understanding now, so as to be able to draw upon those experiences in the future when called upon to negotiate for world peace," said Amos Chin, a senior from Kingston, Jamaica, president of the international student association.

"Americans have a tendency not to think of themselves as foreign until they go to other countries; they are international. It is our hope that this cultural week will promote an understanding of this concept in American students."

One method of increasing student awareness will be the international booths, which will be displayed from Wednesday through Friday, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

The international booths will promote and present culture and present patriotism," said Chin. "The booths will help students to understand that people are the same everywhere." They hope to show that there are good, positive aspects to all countries by displaying artifacts and articles from different lands.

Any BYU student who has articles they wish to display can contact the International Student Office at 228 Kimball Hall.

"Perhaps the most important aspect of international week is creating an atmosphere of understanding between cultures," said Chin.

Other ways that the message of international brotherhood will be conveyed is through an international food fair, an international talent show and an international dance.

ACTION LINE

Who chooses and censors the movies that are shown in the Varsity theater? Also, how are the censors chosen?

Submitted by C.H., a junior from Louisville, Ky.

Films are chosen and censored by a committee made up of students, faculty and staff. Mr. Michael Bentley, chairman of the films committee. To choose the movies, they use a series of guidelines set up by a task force several years ago.

"We try to show films that have some moral value and are not contrary to the teachings of the LDS church," said Bentley. "We try to keep the integrity of the movie. In other words, if it requires major editing, we don't show it."

The committee watches three to four movies a week. Members of the committee are chosen by a staff member and typically the culture officer, resident and the chairperson of the film society have been included on the panel.

Direct queries should be sent to the Monday Edition Editors, 535 ELWC, Provo, Utah 84602. Please include a name and telephone number. Answers will be printed in the Monday Edition.
